Main article: Emic and etic

The various etic units that represent a given emic unit of a certain kind are denoted by a corresponding term with the prefix allo- (other, different), such as allophone, allograph, and allomorph.

[edit]

The prefix allo- used in terms such as allophone is from the Ancient Greek: ἄλλος (allos, 'other'). This prefix is also used in chemistry.

- A phoneme is an underlying object whose surface representations are phones (speech sounds); different phones representing the same phoneme are called allophones of that phoneme. The choice of allophone may be dependent on the phonological context (neighboring sounds), or may be subject to free variation.
- A morpheme is an underlying object whose surface representations are meaningful fragments of language; different fragments representing the same morpheme are called allomorphs of that morpheme.
- A grapheme is an underlying object whose surface representations are graphs (written symbols) [Meletis & Dürscheid, 2022]; different graphs representing the same grapheme are called alographs of that grapheme (the term glyph is used in computing, as a synonym of graph).

- Ideologeme (in sociology, a unit in ideological analysis)
- Meme (acts as a unit for carrying cultural ideas, symbols, or practices)
- Mytheme (in mythology, basic narratological/mythological unit)
- Narreme (in narratology, basic narratological unit)
- Ludeme (in games, basic unit of play)
- Segment (linguistics)
